National Parks of Japan

DAISEN

Tottori's Iconic Peak

Daisen National Park

Standing at 1,729 m above sea level, Mt. Daisen is the tallest peak in the Chugoku region and is also known as "Houki Fuji" (Mt. Fuji of Houki) due to its striking shape when viewed from the northwest. The mountain's foothills are rich in nature and offer different experiences in spring, summer, fall, and winter, allowing you to enjoy all kinds of outdoor activities throughout the year, including mountain climbing, skiing, and camping. Experience the rich natural environment and beautiful scenery that have earned this area a place among the top 3 in Japan's famous mountain rankings.

HINOGAWA

One of Tottori's Three Great Rivers

Hinogawa River

The Hinogawa River is one of Tottori Prefecture's [illegible] designated Class-A important rivers and [illegible] 77 km. Its source is in Mikuni, where the borders of Tottori, Hiroshima, and Shimane prefectures meet, and the scenery that you can see along the river becomes increasingly richer in natural beauty as you travel upstream. In June, the fishing season for ayu (sweetfish) opens, attracting many anglers to its waters.
The river is a popular destination for canoeing and rafting, making it a must-visit spot for [illegible] enthusiasts!

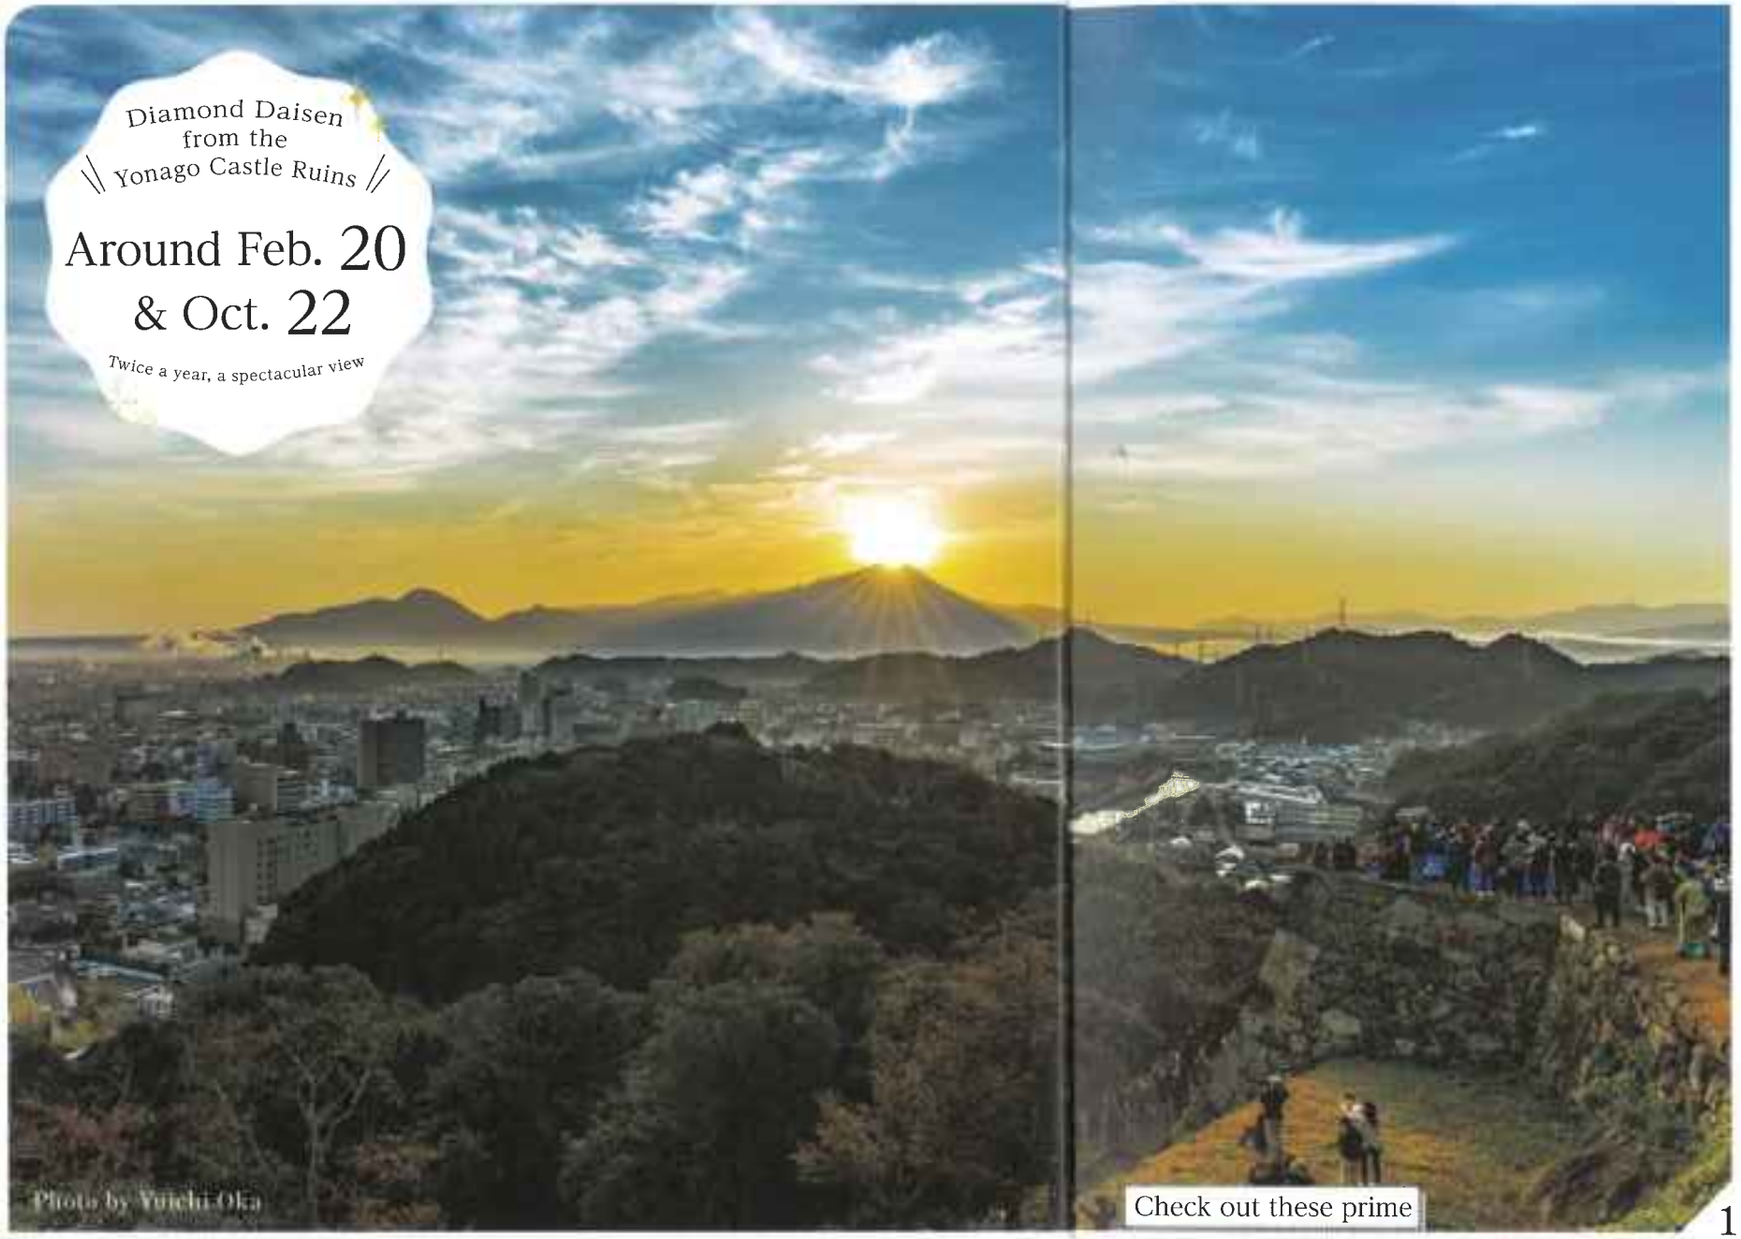

Blessing of the Sea

Seafood Delights—A Blessing from The Sea of Japan

Although Tottori is known for its winter catch of Matsuba crab, the prefecture's seafood offerings go far beyond just crab.

In addition to Matsuba crab, visitors can enjoy a variety of delights with each season. In spring, you can enjoy farm-raised Sakaiminato salmon. Summer is the season for tuna and iwagaki oysters, while white squid is at its peak from summer through late fall.

Early each morning, the markets fill with freshly caught seafood, bringing visits from both tourists and many local residents. We also recommend waking up extra early and taking a tour of the area's lively and bustling [illegible] markets.

Diamond Daisen

A Stunning View of the Iconic Mt. Daisen

Don't miss this twice-a-year opportunity!

Daisen-Oki National Park, home of the highest peak in the Chugoku region, offers a spectacle known as "Diamond Daisen"—a breathtakingly beautiful scene created by the rising sun as it shines like a bright halo upon Mt. Daisen' s peak. This rare phenomenon can only be seen for a limited number of days each year and only twice a year from each viewing spot. Many photographers wait in various locations, hoping to find the perfect moment to capture this stunning view that only appears when the weather conditions are just right.

Daisen-Oki National Park

Stretching from the mountainous regions of western Japan to the Shimane Peninsula coastline and the Oki Islands, Daisen-Oki National Park offers spectacular views of Japan' s pristine, natural scenery. The landscape of this park creates a beautiful and striking painting in the contrast between Mt. Daisen' s rugged north and south faces that culminate in its towering, 1,729-meter-tall peak and the forested foothills and sprawling grasslands below. The area above 800 m is home to old-growth beech forests, plants such as Japanese fawn lilies, and Japanese luehdorfia and Melitaea protomedia butterflies. At elevations above 1,300 m, the landscape transitions to a zone inhabited by shrubbery such as himemochi (Ilex leucoclada) and kuromoji (Lindera umbellata), along with alpine flora such as tsugazakura (Phyllodoce nipponica), akamono (Gaultheria adenothrix), Japanese marbled cranesbill, and Japanese Culver's root.

Fukumaki Firefly Country

From late June to early July each year, this area becomes one of Japan' s best firefly viewing spots, with hime-botaru fireflies (Luciola parvula) filling the mountainsides as far as the eye can see and a great gathering of genji-botaru fireflies (Nipponoluciola cruciata) forming countless trails of overlapping light trails as they glow above the river. Visitors from all over Japan come to enjoy this natural light show that illuminates an entire mountainside with flashing lights. Members of the local Yamagami Community Development Association also engage in activities to protect the fireflies and welcome tourists.

Kagikake Pass

n the foreground, a vast beech forest that symbolizes Mt. Daisen stretches out before you. Beyond that, the towering southern face of the mountain rises like a massive wall, and the mountain' s exposed rock surfaces contrast beautifully with the fresh greenery and autumn foliage spreading down from the mid-mountain slopes, making this one of the most spectacular scenic viewpoints in the region.

Nariishi Beach

Nariishi Beach is a unique coastal area where round stones that have been smoothed out by the waves make a rattling sound as the seawater rushes over them. People use the phrase "yokunaru" to describe how the stones on this beach often make noise, but in Japanese, the same phrase can also mean "to become better," so this location is known as a lucky power spot—a point of positive energy that can bring good fortune to those who visit. This beach also draws attention as a photo spot due to its stunningly beautiful sunset views. If you' re looking for a truly peaceful experience, why not let yourself be soothed by the calming sights and sounds of this beach where time flows at a leisurely pace?

Yonago Castle Ruins

Although no buildings from the original era remain at this castle ruins site, designated as a National Historic Site, the stone walls and other features still retain the atmosphere of the Edo period. A 360-degree panoramic view of mountains, sea, and city unfolds from the castle tower, reached by a roughly 15-minute walk from the foot of the hill — a vista so spectacular it has been featured on television programs as a "castle with breathtaking scenery." The beautifully illuminated stone walls, lit up several times a year, are another highlight.

Castle Town (Uchimachi & Nadamachi Area)

The townscape of this classic castle town still retains Edo-period townhouses and narrow alleys to this day. Near the Kamogawa River that flows through this area, you'll find numerous Jizo statues, which are also part of a Japanese Heritage cultural property site, standing quietly around the town. Teramachi Street, which is lined with nine temples that were relocated from parts of the domain during the construction of Yonago Castle, is also a unique location because it's rare to see a street like this in Japan.

Former JNR Kurayoshi Line Abandoned Railway Tracks

The Kurayoshi Line, a former Japan National Railway (JNR) route, once connected Kurayoshi Station to Yamamori Station in Sekigane, spanning approximately 20 kilometers until its closure at the end of March 1985. More than 40 years after the railway' s closure, remnants of the old tracks and station platforms still remain. A section of the abandoned tracks from the ruins of Taikyuji Station to near the entrance of Yamamori Tunnel runs through a bamboo forest, creating a uniquely mystical landscape.

Mt. Daisen, the highest peak in the Chugoku region, was once home to one of Japan's largest cattle and horse markets, drawing large crowds from far and wide. The routes that many worshippers and merchants with their animals used to travel to Mt. Daisen are known as the Daisen Roads. This has been the general term for the five ancient roads that developed in all four directions around Mt. Daisen: Bouryou Road, Odaka Road, Mizoguchi Road, Yokote Road, and Kawatoko Road.

Jizodaki no Izumi (Jizodaki Water Spring) is a "rishousui" holy water spring that has long been known as a place for travelers and pack animals heading for Daisenji Temple to rest and quench their thirst. The Jizo statue standing beside the spring was erected as a guardian to pray for the safe passage of people and animals along their journey.

Scattered throughout the town, these Jizo statues each carry prayers for long life, good fortune, and other blessings. Walking through the peaceful and nostalgic streets of the historic castle town the jizo statues inhabit, you' ll find yourself naturally feeling relaxed, with a sense of warmth and tranquility settling over both your body and mind.

Mt. Daisen (top right photo)

In 2016, Mt. Daisen Foothills were recognized as a Japan Heritage site under the theme of "Japan's Largest Cattle and Horse Market Fostered by the Jizo Faith." This designation was formed around the cultural and historical narrative surrounding Mt. Daisen and the area it inhabits, starting with Mt. Daisen itself, a symbol of the region, along with the pure, life-giving and delicious water that flows from it. Other elements in the story that resulted in the region's recognition as a Japan Heritage site include the Daisen faith, which developed around Daisenji Temple built on the slopes of Mt. Daisen, as well as the food culture and folklore that have been passed down for generations, and the Daisen Cattle and Horse Market that was said to be the largest in Japan during the Meiji era.

Ogamiyama Shrine Okunomiya

Rebuilt in 1805 as the main shrine of Daisenji Temple, this grand structure was originally dedicated to Daichimyo Gongen (an incarnation of Jizo Bodhisattva). It is one of the largest Gongen-style shrine buildings in western Japan and has been designated a National Important Cultural Property. During the Meiji-era separation of Shinto and Buddhism, this shrine became the inner shrine of Ogamiyama Shrine, resulting in it being dedicated to the deity Onamuchi-no-kami. Inside, visitors can still see ceiling paintings, lacquered sandalwood pillars, and vivid murals, reflecting the former grandeur and prosperity of Daisenji Temple in its heyday.

Daisenji Temple

Founded in 718 by the monk Kinren Shonin, Daisenji Temple grew into a major Buddhist temple centered around Jizo worship during the late Heian period. However, during the Meiji-era separation of Shinto and Buddhism, the temple declined significantly, and where it once was home to over 180 monastic lodgings, today, only four worship halls and ten sub-temples remain. Among its most significant structures is the Amida Hall, which was rebuilt in 1552 and houses a triad of Amida Buddha statues. Both the hall and statues have been designated as National Important Cultural Properties.

Akaiiwa Shrine

The shrine is believed to be the setting of the myth of the deity Okuninushi-no-Mikoto' s resurrection. According to legend, Okuninushi-no-Mikoto once lost his life here but was revived. As a result, the temple is said to bring blessings of "rebirth and revival," and many people visit the temple to pray for success in overcoming challenges in academics, sports, and other areas of their lives.

Kanzaki Shrine

This shrine has been worshipped as a guardian deity of fisheries as well as cattle and horses and is affectionately known as "Kojin-san" by the locals. One of its most striking features is a carved dragon that covers the entire ceiling of the shrine's worship hall for a sight that visitors will find to be powerful and awe-inspiring. You' ll also find carvings of figures, birds, and animals among the shrine. We recommend taking a stroll through the grounds while admiring the shrine's sculptures and carvings.

Tatara iron maiking method

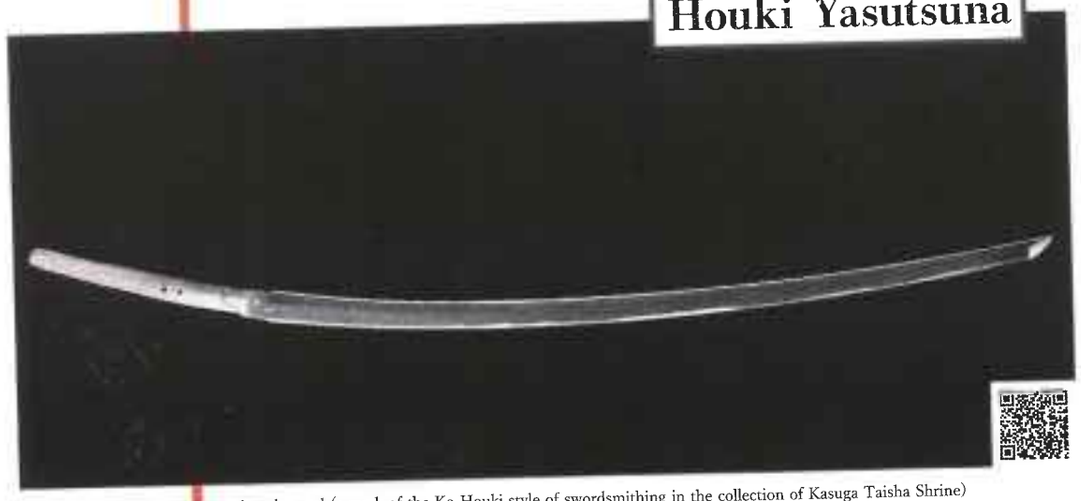

Tatara Ironmaking

A traditional ironmaking technique passed down in Japan for over 1,000 years

About Tatara Ironmaking

Tatara ironmaking is a traditional Japanese method of producing iron, which was developed and refined from ancient times to the early modern period. The name "Tatara" comes from the bellows used to blow air into the furnace that is part of the ironmaking process. This method involves reducing iron sand or iron ore in a clay furnace at relatively low temperatures using charcoal, allowing for the production of high-purity iron. Until the early modern period, tatara ironmaking was responsible for almost all of Japan's domestic iron production.

Houki Yasutsuna

unsigned sword (a work of the Ko-Houki style of swordsmithing in the collection of Kasuga Taisha Shrine)

he central and western regions of Tottori Prefecture are home to numerous ironmaking-related archeological sites, including atara ironworks and blacksmith forges. These historical remains indicate that the area was once a thriving center of Tatara onmaking and a producer of iron goods, including Japanese swords. Among many skilled swordsmiths of the region, Houki sutsuna was one the most renowned, and the works he and others left behind also reveal the history of swordsmithing.

asutsuna was an active swordsmith during the mid-Heian period, a time when the distinct form of the Japanese sword was erfected, and he is regarded as the "founding master of Japanese swordsmithing." One of his most famous works, the Dojigiri asutsuna, is a designated National Treasure and one of Japan's legendary "Tenka Goken" (Five Greatest Swords), making it ne of Japan's most iconic swords.

Senbakoki(Rice Threshing Tool)

The senbakoki, a traditional agricultural tool used for threshing rice, was widely produced in Kurayoshi from the late Edo period to the Taisho era, with Tottori's Tatara ironmaking industry playing a key role in its development. One of its defining features was its Kyara Steel, a uniquely hardened metal that provided the tool with exceptional sharpness, and blacksmiths traveled from region to region to sell as well as repair these threshers, which helped expand their distribution and made it one of the most produced items in Japan.

Tatara School, Neu Gakusha

Located within the former "Demise Kondo" (now Hino Town Public Hall), which was once a hub for trading iron made with the Tatara ironmaking method, this museum displays exhibitions related to Tatara ironmaking. The facility also houses a branch of the Hino Town History and Folklore Museum, which features a valuable model of the Tsugouyama Tatara Takadono Iron Mill. Additionally, the Tatara School, Omiya Gakusha, which is located inside the Omiya Regional Development Center in Nichinan Town, offers exhibits where visitors can learn about the principles of Tatara ironmaking and the history of iron production.

Shimodan Nakayama Iron Works Ruins

Designated as a town historic site on October 4, 2022, the Shimodan Nakayama Iron Works Ruins are known as a tatara ironworks operated by the Kondo family of Neu, who leased the land from the former Kinoshita family of Abire. The site remained in operation until 1921, when tatara iron production came to an end in the Hino district, and it is a rare and well-preserved remnant that retains the appearance of a tatara ironworks of that era.

This shop sells a selection of local specialties (sweets, dairy products, kamaboko fish cakes) with a focus on Kotoura's iconic "umaimon" (great-tasting food).

Seafood Markets

Tottori, a treasure trove of seafood, offers a rich variety of seasonal delicacies throughout the year—not just the Matsuba crab that Tottori is already known for, but also nodoguro (blackthroat seaperch), iwagaki oysters, sazae sea snails, and more!
Many seafood markets are also located next to restaurants and eateries, allowing you to savor the blessings of the sea right on the spot!

Sakaiminato Seafood Direct Sales Center

Located next to the Sakaiminato Fish Market, this direct sales center offers fresh fish caught and delivered straight from the port. Each shop is run by seasoned seafood experts who know Sakaiminato' s fish inside and out. From seasonal recommendations to recipes and more, if it has to do with fish, they'll know the answer.

Daisen Okowa

Daisen Okowa has been passed down through generations as a traditional celebratory dish, earning it official recognition from the Japanese government as a "100-year food." The dish itself consists of glutinous rice steamed with ingredients such as wild vegetables in the spring and chestnuts and mushrooms in the fall. The specific seasonings and ingredients for Daisen Okowa also differ by household, with each having their own unique combination that has been passed down from one generation to the next.

Saba Shabu

Yonago has Japan' s largest concentration of mackerel shabu-shabu (hot pot) restaurants in Japan, with as many as eight restaurants offering "saba shabu" (mackerel hot pot) near Yonago Station. The traditional way to enjoy saba shabu is by swishing fresh cuts of saba into a hot pot with sliced onion, and then dipping them in a sauce, but one of the features of this dish is how each restaurant offers its own distinct way for you to enjoy it.
